Here is a summary of some of the key recent cases we have been involved with, which illustrate the wide variety of issues that can arise in a commercial context. Unsurprisingly, of all the industries that rely on intellectual property, IPR is one of the most highly-developed. In fact, at least in the UK, it is widely recognised that the law of IPR is one of the most demanding and sophisticated areas of commercial law. One of the key issues in this highly-regulated area is the breadth of claims available in respect of IPR, as a patent does not exist. Generally speaking, any claim in respect of IPR which is not covered by another form of protection is open to challenge. For instance, even if a company has a design patent for a logo, the public has the right to copy or imitate it without infringement of the company's rights. The most common form of IPR is trade mark registration, but another example is when a customer refuses to pay for goods or services. This gives the company the right to cancel the supply agreement, on the basis of a consumer law claim. In the main, in order to enforce these rights, companies may rely on two very different forms of proceedings. The most common is a claim under Trade Marks Act 1994, either for

Keymacro is a freeware utility to add Hotkey macros to your Windows OS. Keymacro works like other hotkey utility programs, so you can assign custom key combinations to all your favorites commands. The only difference is that you have a quick and easy way to modify them. Keymacro adds a hotkey to every process started with the startup in Windows. With Keymacro you can associate hotkeys to launch, minimize, restart, shutdown,... and many more. You can also easily modify your hotkey assignment. With Keymacro you can: * Add hotkeys to: - Windows Explorer (File -> Open) - Open and close programs - Minimize or restore windows - Start or quit applications - Shutdown or restart the computer - Log out * Create your own hotkeys to launch your most used programs * Add shortcuts to the windows menu (Start Menu) * Edit and customize hotkey configurations * Launch a command, or an application, with a custom key combination * Re-assign hotkeys to your favourite commands * Use hotkeys in your favorite programs Keymacro is available as a.zip file. It's a small-sized tool that can be quickly installed and doesn't have any software dependencies. After setup, it gets integrated into the systray where it silently runs. Control the system volume using keys or key combinations It also brings up the configuration panel to show the hotkeys defined for volume up (F9), volume down (F8) and mute (F10). A volume indicator is shown on the upper-left corner of the screen every time you make volume adjustments using this app, even if you're working in fullscreen programs. If you prefer using these functional keys for something else, you can change the default keyboard shortcuts from the options panel, which can be opened from the right-click menu of the systray icon. Worth noting is that you can set a combination of up to four keys for each command. Change the default hotkeys and other options By default, the tool automatically runs every time you turn on the computer and starts minimized to the systray. However, you can disable both these options as well as pick the on-screen display color and adjust the volume step when increasing and decreasing it, or deactivate the on-screen indicator. If the volume was previously muted, you can allow or prevent the application for unmuting it when increasing or decreasing it, depending on your preference. The interface theme can be modified too, along with the interface language and audio output device. You can also deactivate Volume Keys from the systray instead of shutting it down. Q: jQuery and Ajax for phone numbers in PhoneGap app I've got a PhoneGap app that has a nice feature of being able to tap a phone number and it will launch the native Dialer app, and then after a few seconds it will come back into the app (via the event handler). It works great for phones with numeric keypad
