On a standard keyboard, the keyboard shortcut for changing volume is alt+f7. For devices that do not have a fn key, use the ALT and F7 combination. Study on human breast cancer based on cytokine expression and growth-promoting factors. Cell culture medium conditioned by MCA-103 fibroblasts significantly enhanced the growth of several breast cancer cell lines but not of normal cells. The presence of epidermal growth factor (EGF) and basic fibroblast growth factor (FGF) in conditioned medium was detected by specific enzyme-linked immunosorbent assays (ELISAs). The production of these growth factors was studied by Northern blot analysis. The enhanced growth of breast cancer cells was inhibited by anti-EGF antibody. The inhibition of breast cancer cell growth was due to down-regulation of c-fos, c-myc, EGF receptor and FGF receptor genes. In contrast, the growth of fibroblasts was enhanced by EGF. These results suggest that the addition of EGF and FGF in conditioned medium enhanced breast cancer cell growth. Q: I just got a demerit for not knowing how to use left join properly I am having a problem with a problem in a question that I got a demerit for. I think this problem is a duplicate of this post here. The poster there posted his own answer to his question with more details than I was able to find on the internet. That said, my question is that how does the poster there know his answer is correct, and mine isn't? My understanding is that an answer that says "this is how to do a left join" would be the same as answering a question that says "what is the answer?" What did I do wrong, and why is the other poster's answer right, and mine wrong? The problem is: A: That's a good question. The only reason the question's been closed is because it is off-topic as "opinion-based". When you ask a question you're taking a risk. I believe you're risking loss of reputation points for this one. In this case, the system's looking for a canonical solution. That is what a wiki is. The answers to this question will be found in the canonical solution. You're not gonna find it in your question, because you
